

Custom Home Construction

We build the dream homes of some of the most discriminating people in the DFW metroplex. With a West Coast flair, we focus on the finer details of the construction and finishing process to create a final product that is absolutely superior in quality and workmanship.

With each home that we build, the owner Simmie Cooper, is involved with the home's design from the onset of the project. He meets with the client and the architect to discuss their wishes and requirements, and then works hand-in-hand with the architect in coming up with the home's design.

"I am really involved in the construction process of every house," Simmie said.

For Simmie Cooper, part of building a strong company is developing a reputation of honesty and integrity. Taking good care of the customer and looking after their needs well after the sale is one way that Cooper Homes has established this vital reputation in the community.

A Model Home

For many of our custom homes, we take the extra time and effort to create a miniature model of the home, including landscaping, pools, driveways and all of the elements that will make up your new home. This model will give you a unique perspective on the final product and allow everyone to identify areas that may need change or may just not turn out the way you expected.
